Lytton Industries, Beverly Hills, California was posted. Unfortunately, there is no date. But I think it came from the late 1950s or 1960s. If anyone has ever seen this, someone else in the series, or the original Weekly Series (I think it was an internal employee newsletter) I appreciate whatever you can add to history. Then 33 challenging challenges appeared first in our weekly series and were kindly contributed by readers of our mathematical thinking. I suggest that you post each of them separated by a day or so. Like me, I hope you enjoy them too. 2006-06-08, 20:30 #2 Bambus Red! □□□□ May 2003 down 1001110011102 Post quote: originally posted by virtues like Wokki, a good puzzle is its own reward. Aker recently sent me a third volume of problem recreation, which is a series of issues compiled by Angela Dan and published by Liton Industries in advertising in the early 1960s. I hope to find all of the series and be able to play them on this forum. 2006-08-10, 08:38 #6 Bronze medalist January 2004 Mumbai, India 22x33x19 Post problem recreational quote: I originally found a booklet with this name while browsing my bookshelf. Rewarded with the next challenge, appeared first in our weekly series and was kindly contributed by our mathematical mind readers. I suggest that you post each of them separated by a day or so. Like me, I hope you enjoy them too. Thank you Wycky for presenting us with 33 challenge issues. In addition to the work taken by posting them, they took up hours of recreation and study, accounted for references to my many books, and in short they enlightened me every day. Personally they also allowed me to engage in searching for many books I have in my library. For example H.E. Dudley's Mathematics Entertainment! Today I have used them to compile my problems and they are really great because the oldies struggled to give shortcut methods and solutions. Once again, thank you! The time now is 15:32.
